In the matter of the Department of Corrections
Ruling Numbers 2015-4148, 2015-4149
May 13, 2015

The Department of Corrections (the “agency”) has requested a compliance ruling from the Office of Employment Dispute Resolution (“EDR”) at the Department of Human Resource Management in relation to the grievant’s two December 31, 2014 grievances. The agency alleges that the grievant has failed to comply with the time limits set forth in the grievance procedure for advancing or concluding his grievance.

FACTS

On or about December 31, 2014, the grievant initiated two grievances with the agency. The agency states that on March 25, 2015, it mailed the grievant the agency director’s qualification decisions, which denied qualification of the grievances. Having received no further response from the grievant, on or about April 10, 2015, the agency mailed a notice of noncompliance to him. In its notice of noncompliance, the agency requested a response from the grievant within five workdays of his receipt of the notice. As more than five workdays have elapsed since the grievant received notice of his alleged noncompliance and he has not yet advanced or concluded his grievances, the agency seeks a compliance ruling allowing it to administratively close the grievances.

DISCUSSION

The grievance procedure requires both parties to address procedural noncompliance through a specific process.<sup>1</sup> That process assures that the parties first communicate with each other about the noncompliance, and resolve any compliance problems voluntarily, without EDR’s involvement. Specifically, the party claiming noncompliance must notify the other party in writing and allow five workdays for the opposing party to correct any noncompliance.<sup>2</sup> If the opposing party fails to correct the noncompliance within this five-day period, the party claiming noncompliance may seek a compliance ruling from EDR, who may in turn order the party to correct the noncompliance or, in cases of substantial noncompliance, render a decision against the noncomplying party on any qualifiable issue. When an EDR ruling finds that either party to a grievance is in noncompliance, the ruling will (i) order the noncomplying party to correct its noncompliance within a specified time period, and (ii) provide that if the noncompliance is not timely corrected, a decision in favor of the other party will be rendered on any qualifiable issue, unless the noncomplying party can show just cause for the delay in conforming to EDR's order.<sup>3</sup>

In this case, the grievant appears to have failed to advance or conclude his grievances within five workdays of receiving the agency head's qualification decisions, as required by the grievance procedure.<sup>4</sup> Moreover, the agency notified the grievant of his noncompliance and he has not advanced or concluded his grievances.

As the grievant has apparently failed to advance or conclude his grievances in a timely manner, he has failed to comply with the grievance procedure. We therefore order the grievant to correct his noncompliance within ten workdays of the date of this ruling by notifying his human resources office in writing that he wishes either to conclude the grievances or appeal the qualification decisions to EDR. If he does not, the agency may administratively close the grievances without any further action on its part. The grievances may be reopened only upon a timely showing by the grievant of just cause for the delay (for example, a serious illness, or other circumstances beyond the grievant's control).

EDR's rulings on matters of compliance are final and nonappealable.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>3</sup> While in cases of substantial noncompliance with procedural rules the grievance statutes grant EDR the authority to render a decision on a qualifiable issue against a noncompliant party, EDR favors having grievances decided on the merits rather than procedural violations. Thus, EDR will typically order noncompliance corrected before rendering a decision against a noncompliant party. However, where a party's noncompliance appears driven by bad faith or a gross disregard of the grievance procedure, EDR will exercise its authority to rule against the party without first ordering the noncompliance to be corrected.
