COMPLIANCE RULING OF DIRECTOR

In the matter of Department of Corrections
Ruling Number 2004-639
May 11, 2004

The grievant has requested that this Department administratively review the hearing officer's decision in Case Number 545. The grievant claims that the hearing officer's written decision and conduct at hearing do not comply with the grievance procedure. Specifically, the grievant maintains that: (1) the hearing officer demonstrated bias in favor of the Department of Corrections (DOC or the agency); (2) the hearing officer failed to consider important evidence presented; (3) the hearing officer's decision defies the intent of the grievance procedure; and (4) DOC failed to prove what was charged on the Written Notice. For the reasons discussed below, this Department concludes that the hearing officer's decision and actions did not violate the grievance procedure.

FACTS

On November 19, 2003, the grievant received a Group III Written Notice with termination for violation of employee Standards of Conduct 5-10.17(B)(15), which states: "Gross negligence on the job that results in the escape, death, or serious injury of a ward of the State or the death or serious injury of a State employee." In an attachment to the Group III Written Notice, the agency details the events that led to the grievant's discipline.

On December 14, 2003, the grievant timely initiated a grievance challenging the Group III Written Notice and termination. Subsequently, the grievance was qualified for hearing and a hearing was held on February 17, 2004. In his decision dated February 20, 2004, the hearing officer found the Group III Written Notice and termination warranted and appropriate because "[f]ailure to lock not one, but two inmates in separate recreation cages, no matter how busy the Agency Officers were, was gross negligence."<sup>1</sup> In a March 19, 2004 reconsideration decision, the hearing officer affirmed his original determination. Additionally, the Department of Human Resource Management (DHRM) affirmed the hearing officer's decision as consistent with policy.

DISCUSSION

By statute, this Department has been given the power to establish the grievance procedure, promulgate rules for conducting grievance hearings, and “[r]ender final decisions...on all matters related to procedural compliance with the grievance procedure.”<sup>2</sup> If the hearing officer’s exercise of authority is not in compliance with the grievance procedure, this Department does not award a decision in favor of a party; the sole remedy is that the action be correctly taken.<sup>3</sup>

Alleged Bias

In support of his hearing officer bias claim, the grievant maintains that the hearing officer held the grievant’s representative, who was appearing in her first grievance hearing, to a strict rules of evidence standard, while affording the representative for the agency more leniency with regard to such rules.<sup>4</sup> Additionally, the grievant claims that the hearing officer’s behavior toward the grievant’s representative was “markedly different” than his behavior toward the agency representative, in that he objected to the grievant’s representative’s manner of questioning, but did not object to the same practices by the agency’s representative. Moreover, the grievant asserts that the hearing officer failed to offer assistance to the grievant’s representative regarding her phrasing of questions. Finally, the grievant claims that the hearing officer failed to notify the grievant’s representative of her right to use the agency’s VHS tape in order to question the grievant, when the grievant’s exhibit (a DVD) was incapable of being viewed due to a malfunctioning of the DVD player at the hearing.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> The issue of bias was not raised in the grievant’s original request for administrative review, but was conveyed only during the course of this Department’s investigation of the grievant’s request for administrative review. However, even if the grievant had timely initiated the claim of hearing officer bias, his assertion would fail for the reasons discussed in this ruling.

<sup>5</sup> The grievant maintains that he had previously been provided a video by the agency, but that it was deliberately recorded in fast-forward format. This allegation was conveyed to the hearing officer during the hearing, who according to the grievant, “failed to even comment on the actions by the Commonwealth’s representatives.” The grievant further asserts that he was given a copy of the video on DVD the day before the hearing. The agency refutes the grievant’s allegations and claims that the grievant’s representative was provided a VHS tape recorded exactly the same way as the video provided to the agency representative. Further, the agency maintains that the grievant’s representative had the VHS tape recorded to a DVD herself and that the DVD had not been provided by the agency. In any event, based on the grievant’s recounting of the hearing, there doesn’t appear to have been a “malfunctioning” of the DVD equipment as alleged. Rather, it would appear that the grievant’s representative was having trouble rewinding and fast-forwarding the DVD to a specific point, because a DVD automatically moves backward or forward by track. As the grievant has admitted, he and his representative could not figure out how to get the DVD to go back a track, so they “basically gave up.”

The Rules for Conducting Grievance Hearings require the hearing officer to conduct the hearing in an “orderly, fair and equitable fashion”<sup>6</sup> and to “maintain order, decorum and civility.”<sup>7</sup> Additionally, the hearing officer must establish and maintain a tone of impartiality throughout the hearing process<sup>8</sup> and avoid the appearance of bias.<sup>9</sup> However, the Virginia Court of Appeals has indicated that as a matter of constitutional due process, actionable bias can be shown only where a judge has “a direct, personal, substantial [or] pecuniary interest” in the outcome of a case.<sup>10</sup> While not dispositive for purposes of the grievance procedure, the Court of Appeals test for bias is nevertheless instructive and has been used by this Department in past rulings.<sup>11</sup>

In this case, the grievant has not claimed nor presented evidence that the hearing officer had a “direct, personal, substantial or pecuniary interest” in the outcome of this grievance. Therefore, we find no actionable bias on the part of the hearing officer. Moreover, while the hearing officer may have allowed questioning by the agency’s representative that would not have complied with the rules of evidence, those rules do not apply to grievance hearings,<sup>12</sup> and thus allowing such questioning would not be a violation of the Rules for Conducting Grievance Hearings. Indeed, the hearing officer is to “establish an informal, non-judicial hearing environment that is conducive to a free exchange of information and the development of the facts.”<sup>13</sup> More importantly, it appears as though the hearing officer granted both parties latitude regarding the rules of evidence, not just the agency as the grievant has alleged. For instance, both parties were permitted to ask leading questions.<sup>14</sup>

While the hearing officer should be cognizant of a party’s lack of knowledge of the technical rules of evidence and should in appropriate circumstances offer clarification or guidance on procedural issues, there is no mandatory duty for the hearing officer to instruct the grievant or his representative on how to question witnesses as the grievant has alleged. Moreover, during the hearing, the hearing officer instructed the grievant’s representative that she needed to ask questions of the witnesses instead of testifying for them. Therefore, it appears that the hearing officer did offer some guidance to the grievant’s representative on how she should proceed with witnesses and thus, did not fail to offer assistance as alleged. Similarly, there is no requirement that the hearing officer advise a party of his right to use an opposing party’s exhibit already in evidence.

<sup>14</sup> By the grievant’s own admission, during his direct examination, his representative asked leading questions and somewhat testified for him. Moreover, the grievant states that during this line of questioning, the hearing officer asked the grievant’s representative to “lead a little bit more gently.”

To summarize, in light of the above evidence and circumstances, this Department cannot conclude that the hearing officer demonstrated a direct, personal, substantial or pecuniary interest in the outcome of a case or acted with partiality toward either party. And while certainly the appearance of impartiality is to be avoided, there is insufficient evidence in this case that the hearing officer conducted the hearing inappropriately or abused or exceeded his authority under the grievance procedure.

Weighing Evidence

Hearing officers are authorized to make “findings of fact as to the material issues in the case”<sup>15</sup> and to determine the grievance based “on the material issues and grounds in the record for those findings.”<sup>16</sup> By statute, hearing officers have the duty to receive probative evidence and to exclude irrelevant, immaterial, insubstantial, privileged, or repetitive proofs.<sup>17</sup> Where the evidence conflicts or is subject to varying interpretations, hearing officers have the sole authority to weigh that evidence, determine the witnesses’ credibility, and make findings of fact. As long as the hearing officer’s findings are based upon evidence in the record and the material issues of the case, this Department cannot substitute its judgment for that of the hearing officer with respect to those findings.

In the present case, the grievant objects to the hearing officer’s consideration of the evidence presented. Specifically, the grievant alleges that the hearing officer failed to consider evidence that (1) the padlocks on the recreation cage doors had been properly secured; (2) inmate A spent approximately ten minutes manipulating the padlock on his cage; (3) inmates frequently manufactured keys to various locks in the institution; (4) the padlocks had been exposed to the elements for a number of years and had not been maintained properly; (5) yanking on the padlocks could cause the locks to open; and (6) the grievant and his partner were shown locking and checking the locks on the cage doors.

These challenges simply contest the hearing officer’s findings of disputed fact, the weight and credibility that the hearing officer accorded to the testimony of the various witnesses at the hearing, the resulting inferences that he drew, the characterizations that he made, and the facts he chose to include in his decision. Such determinations are entirely within the hearing officer’s authority.

Fair Hearing/Mitigating Circumstances

The grievant alleges that he presented evidence demonstrating that another correctional officer at his facility had acted similarly to the grievant, but was not disciplined for his actions. According to the grievant, allowing such inconsistency in disciplinary actions defies the intent of the grievance procedure which “shall afford an immediate and fair method for the resolution of employment disputes.”<sup>18</sup>

The term “fair,” as appearing in the statutory provision above cited by the grievant, applies to the grievance process itself.<sup>19</sup> This provision of the grievance statute does not encompass the employing agency’s duty to act fairly when disciplining its employees, as the grievant has alleged. Nevertheless, this Department agrees that an agency’s inconsistency in disciplining similarly situated employees could be unfair and could be used by a grievant in an appropriate case to demonstrate mitigating circumstances.<sup>20</sup>

Under the facts of this case however, it cannot be concluded that the hearing officer erred by failing to consider the grievant’s evidence of inconsistent discipline. Here, the hearing officer stated that it could not be verified, based on the evidence, as to what discipline was administered for the alleged incident cited by the grievant in support of his claim of inconsistent discipline.<sup>21</sup> As stated previously, findings of disputed fact, the weight and credibility that the hearing officer accorded to the testimony of the various witnesses at the hearing, the resulting inferences that he drew, the characterizations that he made, and the facts he chose to include in his decision are determinations entirely within a hearing officer’s authority. Thus, because the hearing officer found that the evidence was insufficient to establish inconsistency in the agency’s discipline, it cannot be concluded that he violated the grievance procedure by failing to mitigate such discipline.

Failure to Prove Written Notice Charges

The grievant maintains that the agency failed to prove the essential elements of the charge on the Written Notice. Specifically, the grievant contends that the agency failed to prove that he was grossly negligent, as that term is defined under the law,<sup>22</sup> or caused serious injury to another state employee. In support of this contention, the grievant states that the agency failed to prove that the grievant’s actions were “conscious

<sup>20</sup> Under the Rules for Conducting Grievance Hearings, once the hearing officer has determined that the employee committed the charged act, that the action constituted misconduct, and that the agency’s discipline was consistent with law and policy, the hearing officer may mitigate the agency’s discipline only after giving due deference to the agency’s right to exercise its good faith business judgment in managing employee matters and its operations. This deference standard comports with that established in other merit system case law, which allows for mitigation only where the agency’s penalty exceeds the “tolerable limits of reasonableness.”<sup>20</sup> See Davis v. Department of Treasury, 8 M.S.P.R. 317, 1981 MSPB LEXIS 305, at 5 (1981) citing to Douglas v. Veterans Admin., 5 M.S.P.B. 313, (1981). The MSPB “will not freely substitute its judgment for that of the agency on the question of what is the best penalty, but will only ‘assure that managerial judgment has been properly exercised within tolerable limits of reasonableness.’” or voluntary” and that the agency admitted at hearing that there was no serious injury to the officer assaulted by the inmate.

<sup>22</sup> The grievant defines “gross negligence” as “a conscious, voluntary act or omission in reckless disregard of a legal duty and of the consequences to another party.” The grievant does not state from what source this definition was obtained.

The Written Notice form states the nature of the offense as “Violation of Employee Standards of Conduct 5-10.17 B. 15 Gross negligence on the job that results in the escape, death, or serious injury of a ward of the State or the death or serious injury of a State employee. Please see attachment.” In the attachment to the Written Notice, the agency describes the grievant’s unacceptable behavior more fully as a failure to lock the gates on the individual recreation cages, which resulted in an inmate exiting his cage and assaulting an officer. Additionally, the attachment to the Written Notice recognizes that the outcome of the grievant’s negligence in the performance of his job duties could have had more serious consequences, and emphasizes the importance of maintaining control and custody of inmates at all times.

The Director of the Department of Human Resource Management (DHRM) has the authority to interpret all policies affecting state employees, and has the authority to assure that hearing decisions are consistent with state policy.<sup>23</sup> Only a determination by that agency could establish whether the act described in the Written Notice and its attachment constitutes misconduct under the Standards of Conduct, or whether the hearing officer erred in his interpretation of state and agency policy.<sup>24</sup> In contrast, this Department has the authority to determine whether the hearing officer’s findings of misconduct or inappropriate behavior are based upon evidence in the record.<sup>25</sup>

On the Written Notice, DOC charged the grievant with an offense specifically listed in its Standards of Conduct.<sup>26</sup> Furthermore, the Written Notice and its attachment sufficiently detail the improper conduct.<sup>27</sup> Pursuant to its ruling dated March 30, 2004, DHRM found that the facts as alleged by the agency and found by the hearing officer

<sup>25</sup> Hearing officers are authorized to make “findings of fact as to the material issues in the case” and to determine the grievance based “on the material issues and grounds in the record for those findings.” See Va. Code § 2.2-3005(D)(ii) and Grievance Procedure Manual § 5.9, page 15.

<sup>26</sup> See DOC Standards of Conduct 5-10.17 B.15.

<sup>27</sup> Additionally, the grievant must have notice of the particular inappropriate behavior with which he is charged. Prior to termination, the United States Constitution and state and agency policy generally entitle a non-probationary, non-exempt employee of the Commonwealth to give oral or written notice of the charges, an explanation of the employer’s evidence, and an opportunity to respond, appropriate to the nature of the case. Board of Education v. Loudermill, 470 U.S. 532, 545-46 (1985); Gilbert v. Homar, 520 U.S. 924 (1997). A more comprehensive post-termination hearing would follow termination. Importantly, the pre-termination notice and opportunity to be heard need not be elaborate, need not resolve the merits of the discharge, nor provide the employee with an opportunity to correct his behavior. Rather, it need only serve as an “initial check against mistaken decisions -- essentially, a determination of whether there are reasonable grounds to believe that the charges against the employee are true and support the proposed action.” Board of Education v. Loudermill at 546. In the present case, the attachment to the Written Notice sufficiently detailed the improper behavior with which the grievant was being charged, thus he had notice of the charges against him.

constituted misconduct under the Standards of Conduct and upheld the hearing officer's interpretation of the state and agency disciplinary policies.<sup>28</sup> Moreover, the hearing officer's findings that the acts described in the attachment to the Written Notice occurred and were improper and it appears that the hearing officer's findings are based upon evidence in the record and the material issues of the case. As such, this Department will not substitute its judgment for that of the hearing officer.

CONCLUSION

Pursuant to Section 7.2(d) of the Grievance Procedure Manual, a hearing officer's original decision becomes a final hearing decision once all timely requests for administrative review have been decided.<sup>29</sup> Within 30 calendar days of a final hearing decision, either party may appeal the final decision to the circuit court in the jurisdiction in which the grievance arose.<sup>30</sup> Any such appeal must be based on the assertion that the final hearing decision is contradictory to law.<sup>31</sup> This Department's rulings on matters of procedural compliance are final and nonappealable.<sup>32</sup>
